

Urgentys integrated into Sentinel +

The Urgentys took a giant leap forward in the UK Security market this week when Monitor Computer Systems announced at their annual user conference that they had integrated the Medical Intelligence (MI) platform into their market leading Sentinel Plus software.

Sentinel is the market leading platform for alarm receiving centres in the UK and Ireland and has gained over 55% of the market. The software is not only installed in commercial alarm receiving centres but also in banks, retailers, local authorities and the police.

The Conference, which took place at the National Exhibition Centre in Birmingham, was attended by around 100 delegates representing some of the leading alarm receiving companies in the UK and Ireland. The MI team attended the event along with their new security market distribution partner, BD1 Services and demonstrated the exciting new features of the Urgentys to a wide range of delegates who are looking for new, added value services to integrate into their alarm receiving centres.

At the event, BD1 launched their bundled service for security installers whereby the Urgentys, and other MI products, are packaged into a fixed monthly cost that will enable the service to be sold easily by the security installation companies that work with these alarm receiving centres. The BD1 package works with the security market, giving revenue opportunities to both the installer and the alarm receiving centre, whilst taking away the billing complications generally associated with sales of mobile communication products.
